M.P. Blasts Off:

Hanley Blames Liberals For "Goon" Invasion

by DOUG WILSON

When Frank Hanley, MP for St. Ann's announced that "I had my committee rooms broken into by the goons of the St. Ann's Liberal organization", he was greeted with thunderous applause.

He condemned what he calls "organized tactics": "the gangsters that were responsible for the destruction of my headquarters stated that they would show up on election day with enough impersonators to stuff the ballot boxes before 2:30", he blasted on.

Hanley promised aid to the various ethnic groups at McGill. "I will have changed, or at least have attention brought to bear on Articles 51 and 52 of the Civil Code, so that if you want to change your name, you will not have to go through the courts." Not finding audience reaction to this suggestion too favorable, he elaborated: "There may be many students at McGill who have a Russian name and would wish to change it during a conflict."

Hanley stated that he has written to Minister of Education Paul-Gein Lajoie and "have requested immediate action so that the students should receive their bursaries immediately."

Someone, reputed to be a Daily staffer threw a roll of toilet paper from the balcony. Another rang a cowbell, while the audience whistled and cheered hoarsely.

"Most radio, television stations and papers are preaching that we have the right to vote. We do not have this right in St. Ann's" claimed Hanley.

Organized Tactics

It is his belief that "there has been a systemized movement to steal the election from the independent member by passing over hundreds and hundreds in making up enumeration rolls."

He said that he "would be very pleased to advise anyone on what to do 'about the situation' but later remarked that 'I have had my phone disconnected.' An unknown friend in the audience recommended that he pay his bill.

Beginning: "I am not authorized," Hanley was interrupted by his biggest hand of the speech. His listeners eventually allowed him to say that "I am not authorized officially, but I'm very much interested in, students demanding tax cuts."

"People today must pay taxes on an income insufficient for the necessities of life," he stated, "I think this is wrong."

Unimpressed

Attempting to regain prestige lost over his last statement, Hanley stated that Montreal should have at least thirty per cent representation in the Provincial Legislature, but the audience was unimpressed.

He then returned to his favorite topic, the Liberals, "At 2:30, during the Remembrance Day ceremonies, my Liberal opponent paraded through the streets with twenty-five cars, blowing their horns," he claimed.

"My opponent is a Liberal and a separatist. You realize his ignorance in playing pop music while we are honoring our dead."

Hanley said that he believed there was an ordinance against processions of cars blowing horns, but that "the police department gives no help."

He complained that while the Liberals have stated there is no patronage, no kickbacks, "where did the liberal candidate get $20,000 to campaign with?"

An anonymous listener helped him out with the solution — "selling fudge."

"Sum Up"

Hanley said that he would "sum up." An admirer advised him to "shut up." Unperturbed, he continued with an observation, "I think that you should go where you're heading for." The audience, obviously moved, kept silent, and some headed for 2 pm lectures.

In the question period that followed, he was asked just what he could accomplish as an independent in a party-dominated legislature.

He replied "this is the reason why I gave up all the pleasures and amusements." He claimed that Frank Hanley, M.P. for St. Ann's, make a point during his speech in the Union Ballroom yesterday. Councillor Hanley was invited to speak here by the Debating Union, but met with a rather mixed reception.

McGill, British Team Will Clash On Compulsory Union Membership

Should membership in a trade union be a compulsory condition of employment? The problem will be hammered out tonight when two McGill speakers meet a touring British team in a public debate at 8:30 pm in Redpath Hall.

McGill's Gordon Echenberg and Irwin Cotler will resolve that compulsory union membership is illegal; David Erroll Prior-Palmer from Oxford, and Alan Richard Andrews, from Leeds University, will take the negative.

GORDON ECHENBERG

Both teams have good debating records, being almost unbeaten. The McGill duo have debated together in some 22 events, and have lost only one. The visitors, nearing the end of a massive six-week trans-Canada tour, have participated in over 25 debates and have only lost one.

Cotler is now Editor-in-Chief of the McGill Daily, and was last year President of the Debating Union. He has an array of debating awards: the Papineau Trophy; the Hugessen Memorial Trophy twice; with stable-mate Echenberg he has won the Eastern Canada Debating Championships; was runner-up in the Canadian National Championships; was the only McGill team ever to beat Norfolk Penitentiary in some 14 years of effort. A past Chairman of MCWA, former SEC rep. for Arts and Sciences, and a Scarlet Key, he is also one of the few ever to win both a Gold A and Gold Key.

As Cotler's long-time debating partner, Echenberg's record is necessarily very similar. He also includes on his six-year record the Inter-University Debating League championship, and with Cotler he defeated Harvard in a scintillating public debate last year, and is currently appearing on CBC's "Youth Special" debates.

British Debaters

The two British debaters were chosen from over 30 universities by a special committee set up by the Commonwealth Relations Office and the English Speaking Union. Now they are two-thirds through the tour — sponsored annually by the British Information Services — with a record almost unbeaten.

Oxonian Prior-Palmer is an Old Etonian, studying Politics, Philosophy and Economics at Christ College. Now 22, he is interested in skiing, sailing and politics; a veteran globetrotter already, he will enter the business world on graduating next spring.

Colleague Andrews is 27. Currently finishing his MA in English and Philosophy at Leeds, he hopes eventually to teach in university. He was on the executive of the University Union three years ago, has debated considerably in Leeds, and was a national semi-finalist twice in the National Union of Students' Debating Tournament. He lists extra-curricular activities as editing magazines, writing, various student committees, and part-time teaching.

Lectures Cancelled

All lectures will be cancelled tomorrow, Wednesday, November 14, from 1 pm, due to the Provincial Elections.

SEC Elections To Select New Student Reps

by PAUL BANNERMAN
SEC Reporter

Several representatives for the Students' Executive Council will be chosen in elections to be held on Wednesday, November 28. Saeed Mirza, Chief Returning Officer of the Students' Society is calling the election to replace Council members whose term of office expires at the end of 1962.

Two representatives will be elected from the undergraduate students in the Faculty of Arts and Science, two from Engineering, and one from each of the following: Law, Architecture, Commerce, Medicine, Dentistry and Graduate Studies. There will be one representative for Music, Divinity, and Education, and one for Physical and Occupational Therapy, Graduate Nurses, and Social Work.

All students in their second-to-last year are eligible to run for office. The Chief Returning Officer stressed that the student body should get the best representatives they have, and this means that capable students should seriously consider running for office.

Gordon Echenberg, President of the Students' Society, stated that the SEC is "interested in bright, dedicated, independent thinkers." He went on to say that as members of the SEC they must keep aware of events in student life, especially at McGill, and more generally within the province and country.

Mirza, in outlining the duties of a member of the SEC, mentioned that the Council member must attend meetings of the Council and help make major decisions, for which he and his fellow members of the SEC are held responsible to the entire student body.

SEC Power

He emphasized that the SEC is a very powerful organization on the campus, with certain disciplinary powers, and strong powers over campus activities and organizations. Thus it is important that the candidates be serious-minded individuals, potential leaders, who will be willing to accept responsibility. He added that the experience one gains serving on the SEC cannot be gained from any other campus activity.

The Chief Returning Officer hoped that at least two candidates would be nominated for each post. In past years some faculties where students must work very hard, such as Medicine, find it very difficult to get enough candidates to contest the election.

Nominations must be signed by 25 members of the Students' Society and by the candidate himself. The nomination sheets must be in accordance with the form prescribed in Article Two of the electoral by-laws (contained in the Students' Handbook). It is suggested that candidates examine these by-laws. The SEC office will be happy to answer questions of prospective candidates concerning nomination sheets which must be handed in to the Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Society, Myron Galloway, by November 16.

Amused Or Enlightened?

Yesterday McGill students were entertained by the performance of one of the more curious phenomena of the Quebec political scene, in the person of the inimitable Frank Hanley. For most of the two or three hundred people present, Mr. Hanley's hour-long oration was their only direct contact with the issues of the provincial election. Admittedly Mr. Hanley's analysis of the problems of St. Ann's and its "suburbs" (by which, believe it or not, he meant our university) was not without a certain appeal. His mental powers appear undiminished in the three years since his previous appearance, despite the strain of attempting to conduct an honest election. However it could hardly be said that he shed much light on the deeper issues of the present election campaign.

It is doubtful whether anyone expected Mr. Hanley to do so, and the inference that we are forced to make is that no one was interested. We say this because the only other campus event connected with the election was attended by perhaps a quarter of the number of students who heard the members for St. Ann's. We refer to the appearance of Richard J. Hyde, speaker of the Legislative Assembly, which was sponsored by the Liberal Club.

In recent years the Debating Union has implicitly assumed the responsibility of inviting speakers involved in municipal politics, and Mr. Hanley's presence suggests that the present executive feels called upon to assume a similar role in the provincial field. Whether through inefficiency, lack of imagination or both, this function has not been fulfilled. None of the mayoralty candidates spoke at McGill this year, in contrast to previous civic elections. In the present provincial campaign Sir George Williams students had the opportunity to hear René Lévesque, University of Montreal students heard not only the Resources Minister but Mr. Lesage as well. McGill students had a riotous time with Mr. Hanley.

But it is not only the Debating Union which should be taken to task. With the single and relatively unimportant exception already noted, the political clubs also neglected the occasion. It is not unreasonable to suppose that Mr. Lesage would have interested as many students as Mr. Hanley. And yet, the self-proclaimed leaders of student activity failed to invite any prominent spokesman for either the government or the official opposition to present his views. At least in theory these organizations represent the student body and it is perhaps a commentary on the students of this university as a whole that they did not offer a platform for a serious discussion of election issues.

Provincial Elections:

The Issues And The Campaign

by JACK CITRIN

Without discussing in detail the many issues raised during this current provincial election campaign, I would like to point out what the parties have been stressing. Apart from the need to nationalize the private power companies, the Liberals have emphasized (1) the advent of freedom to Quebec, claiming that this indeed important event coincided with their 1960 election victory, (2) the fact that their 2-year period in office has meant honest administration, and (3) concrete benefits in the field of social welfare, the Hospital Insurance Plan, educational reforms, and highway expansion program having been singled out for special praise.

The negative side of the Liberal campaign has been an attack on the Union Nationale record. The attack consists of the reasonable assumption that to re-elect the same men who stole Quebec blind for 16 years and to expect them to act as serious, honest reformers and administrators would be somewhat naive.

The Union Nationale has come out with a program which promises much but says little about how it is going to attain its worthy objectives. Underlining the party's faith in the inherent goodness of private enterprise, the program's chief attraction to voters is contained in the pledges to raise the basic income tax exemptions (lowered by the Liberals to pay for hospitalization insurance), to institute, with some reservations, a general, province-wide minimum wage of $1 per hour, and in the plan for a universal portable pension system (this last stolen from the Liberal platform of 1960.)

The UN has strongly attacked the Liberals for raising taxes after having promised not to do so, for having inaugurated welfare programs which favor the rich relatively more than the poor, and for planning to lead the province down the road to socialism, having already brought it to the brink of bankruptcy. The party's position on the nationalization issue is obscure, although the warnings against embarking upon a voyage to socialism and Mr. Johnson's continued fears about the high cost of the power takeover would lead one to believe that he, personally, opposes nationalization.

Techniques Of Campaigning

It is very interesting to compare the types of campaigns waged by the two main protagonists, for it is possible by means of this comparison to clearly distinguish differences in the parties' attitudes towards the solution of political problems facing Quebec today. The Liberals, have, in general, been appealing to the electorate on the high level of ideas and general principles. Mr. Lesage has refrained from making untenable promises and, instead, has appealed to the intelligence and political maturity of the voter (who, unfortunately, may lack the requisite quantities of the above-mentioned qualities) to bring him back to power.

The Liberals have promised many studies and Royal Commissions, so many, in fact, that one might suspect them of wanting to avoid action in several cases. The difficulty of the Liberals early in the campaign lay in relating their admirable set of principles and "politique de grandeur" to local, more mundane issues which concern the voters much more directly. This defect seems to have been corrected and bridges, schools, and roads are again being promised to voters as inducements to vote Liberal.

The Union Nationale, on the other hand, is a master of the art of getting through to the "little man." Daniel Johnson has been highly successful in local campaigning of the person-to-person type. His party, however, while capitalizing on the exploitation of local grievances has been unable to relate their hodgepodge of promises to a coherent set of principles or political philosophy of positive content. The UN then, is appealing to the rural voter in particular, hoping that the minimum wage pledge will help offset the official union disapproval of the party and win for it working-class votes.

The two parties have totally divergent attitudes toward the necessity of intellectuals and technical experts as participants in the political and administrative process. The Liberals have emphasized throughout the campaign the need for a planned attack upon social and economic problems based upon research and study of the problems by experts. The UN has made clear its distrust of the use of "intellectuals, planificateurs et sociologues" by the government, claiming that these men have no knowledge of the real problems of the people. This attitude is characteristic of political parties which are, by and large, in favour of the status quo and which stress the values of a traditionalist and rural society.

McGill's Trees — Unsatisfactory?

In October 1855 a young scholar saw McGill University for the first time. He had this to say about what he saw:

"Materially, it was represented by two blocks of unfinished and partly ruinous buildings, standing amid a wilderness of excavators' and masons' rubbish, overgrown with weeds and bushes. The grounds were unfenced, and pastured at will, by herds of cattle, which not only cropped the grass, but browsed on the shrubs, leaving unhurt only one great elm, which still stands as the 'founder's tree', and a few old oaks and butternut trees."

There were many things to be done to put McGill's house in order and this young man spent the best years of his life doing them. He laboured at his task until 1893 and during these 38 years he accomplished miracles. In spite of teaching, administrative, research, religious and social obligations, he became McGill's first Gardenmaster and a reference selected from his autobiography confirms this.

By PAUL E. MAYCOCK, Associate Professor and Curator of the Herbarium

"At the same time, in the hope that the Faculty of Arts might be able before many years to occupy permanently the college buildings proper, the improvement of the grounds was begun by planting and making walks. At first I did this at my own cost, as a labour of love, merely asking permission of the Board."

The man referred to was a Canadian of Pictou, Nova Scotia,

John William Dawson, McGill's fourth Principal.

The scholarly reputation that McGill gained under his guidance has been since enlarged and extended. Teaching, research and museum facilities have continued to be gradually expanded until during the present semester, the administration foretells of expansion on an unbelievable scale in the present and near future. During the period of almost seventy years since Dr. Dawson retired, the grounds of McGill have been enlarged, extended and beautified. Much of the increase in beauty has resulted from the growth increment of the trees that he planted or the vigilance of the administration and the present Gardenmaster in maintaining the tradition he initiated. It is a well-known fact that McGill University, to a large percentage of the people who dwell in Montreal, the province or the Dominion, is a scene that begins at the Roddick Gates, continues up the avenue of stately trees through the campus, and ends at the Arts Building, the tomb of James McGill and Penhallows' Ginkgo tree.

Have we of McGill the right to remove this image from the eyes of the public of Montreal, from those of the world or from those of our own? Dr. Dawson may have lived seventy years ago and under present day conditions be considered behind the times (he was in his ideas about glaciation), and he may have been denied an education in town planning, but there is little doubt that he left us a great legacy in that avenue of magnificent trees that he planted to replace the original, "circuitous and ungraded cart track, almost impassable at night." May we never go back to the mud and slush of those times.

Kingston Invasion Set; Tickets On Sale Today

They can't do it. It's impossible. Statisticians refuse to admit such an occurrence. But it happened. Queen's won the toss again for the third time straight. Once again, all good McGillians and true must pack their Red and White sweaters, their striped toilet paper, and their multitudinous flasks, board the special and advance on Kingston — this time with the train on the tracks, please.

Barring unforeseen eventualities (such as Queen's defaulting or Castro testing some of his newly-acquired defence missiles), the train will leave Central Station at 8 am Saturday, pause momentarily in Ste. Anne's, and then charge on to Kingston with the intention of arriving there at 11:30 am.

Recovery

This will give anyone who is feeling slightly "under the weather" an hour and a half to recover before the game starts. Kickoff time will be an hour early for this play-off game — 1 pm. The seats will be a big improvement over three weeks ago, with the section from Center field to the goal line on the opposite side of the stadium going completely to McGill at the cost of $1.50 per seat.

After the victory parade up Princess Street, McGill students can head for the station and the special train back which will leave at 6 pm. For those who somehow miss this trip, the regular run leaves Kingston at 7:25 pm. For those who wish to stay longer, the special ticket is good until Monday night.

The novelty of this campaign lies in the extensive use of radio and TV for campaigning by both parties, culminating in the Lesage-Johnson debate. For a time it was felt that the campaign would not sink to the level of previous ones in Quebec but unfortunately the last two weeks have seen the revealing of fake election ballots, contrived pro-UN radio interviews, and doubt has been thrown upon the independence of the judiciary. Earlier in the campaign it had been charged that the Liberals would deprofessionalize the Catholic schools but Mr. Johnson soon discarded this slogan, although it would be too much to hope for similar good taste in the case of Mr. Lévesque being compared to Castro. It has then, become a typical Quebec election campaign and it is to be hoped that at least massive fraud on election day can be avoided.

Hanley On Goons...

during the war, French-Canadian workers "were forced to work for nine cents an hour, they were forced to pull plows in places of horses."

Hanley entered politics "to make things equal for all classes." He said that "my first service as an independent was to see to it that no-one had to work for nine cents an hour."

WUS Panel Discusses East-West In Pakistan

How have the East and West influenced the development of the young State of Pakistan? This will be the theme of the panel discussion "Infants of the Orient and the Occident in Pakistan" to be held in the PSCA at 8 tomorrow night.

The group of panelists will include Dr. W. Smith and Dr. C. Adams of the Institute of Islamic Studies, Dr. J. Moore of the School of Social Work, and two Pakistani students at McGill, Salahuddin Malik and Zafar Ansari. The moderator will be Nissar Siddiqui, President of the McGill Pakistan Club.

The discussion, which is sponsored by the World University Service and the International Student Association, is on the same theme as that to be used by the 6th Annual WUS Seminar being held in Pakistan next summer.

McGill will be sending two delegates sponsored by the SEC to this educational seminar. From Canada there will be 35 students and five professors representing 16 universities.

Purpose

The purpose of the seminar is to further international co-operation and to give the delegates a first-hand view of the country under study. Representatives will spend half of the two-month period touring the country, spending as much time as possible with Pakistani students. Then the Seminar will reconvene to discuss all aspects of the theme.

On Wednesday night, each panelist will speak on one aspect of the topic. This will be followed by a discussion among the panelists and questions from the floor. Almost every phase of Pakistan's culture, government, religion, and Oriental and Occidental of Western influence, will be dealt with at this seminar.

Open Jazz Meeting

The Jazz Society will sponsor an informal open session for interested musicians and jazz fans from 7:30-10 in the Union Ballroom. The Society Trio will play, but all other good musicians who play jazz are invited to sit in. It is hoped that this will be the first of a series throughout the year. All non-members are welcome.

THE SNOWMAN

It is indeed ironic that some of the most familiar synonyms for the word 'league' are 'loop' and 'circuit'. As a result of six weeks play and nearly two and a half months of deep involvement in football, McGill's Redmen and the Queen's Golden Gaels find themselves having closed the loop. The head of the snake has come around to bite its own tail.

In essence, all the events that have transpired since October 6 are now null and void. The fact that the Redmen have a 2-0 record against the Gaels is rendered meaningless. That Queen's has been able to go through the schedule convincingly handling the teams that have beaten McGill is itself for naught.

Next weekend the season, to all intents and purposes, begins and ends in one fell swoop. This follows the pattern that has woven its way into the O.Q.A.A. over the past two years. In 1960, the Redmen and a vociferous cheering section of 1,500 took Kingston by storm. McGill blanked Queen's 21-0 in a game that saw Queen's get inside the Redmen forty only once.

Last year, the Redmen won the right to challenge and they went back to Kingston. The Queen's Journal laughed at them, blatantly stating that "...the Redmen have no right playing on the same field with the Gaels." More humiliating than this rash outburst of immodesty however was Queen's eventual conquest of the Redmen. The final score, 11-0.

We don't feel it would be out of line for the Daily to take a stand similar to the one that the Journal took last year. In terms of tête-à-tête competition with the Gaels this year, the Redmen are undisputed champions.

However, we hold nothing but the highest respect for the ability of the Golden Gaels and their coach Frank Tindall. The Redmen will enter this game as a wary football team, not a scared one. Like coach Bill Bewley said yesterday, "Guys like Mackenzie and Blair didn't come back to lose once again."

Just one last thing is left to be said. The Redmen have more than a right to play on the same field with the Gaels this time around. The memory of 1961 strongly lingers.

Hoopla's Here

This evening at 8, the 1962-63 edition of the basketball Redmen play their initial game of the schedule. The collection of fortunes, or should we say misfortunes, which has befallen McGill basketball in the short span of eight months is almost too much to be believed.

Last season the McGill team, headed by Bob Berkman, Doyle Perkins and Ron Horeck was the darling of winter sport buffs. In city intercollegiate play the Redmen went undefeated to win the CIBL championship. Not one of the big three is back at McGill this year.

This leaves just three men returning from last year's team. Of the newcomers, only one Steve Chandler looks as if he can be a great asset to the Redmen effort. Even here there's a hitch. The possibility reigns that Chandler may not play in all Redmen games.

In comparison to what Coach Ron Sharpe had going for him last year, the new contingent will not measure up. In absolute terms, it could be a long, cold winter.

Basketballers Ready; Season Begins Tonight

Tonight marks the opening game in the 1962-63 schedule of the McGill Redmen, with the Red and White club facing a revitalized and tough opponent in the persons of the Loyola Warriors at the Currie Gym. At 7 pm, one hour before the varsity cagers take on the Loyolans, the Junior Varsity team will face their Loyola counterparts. This match promises to be an interesting affair for all Redmen spectators. The juniors have looked exceptionally strong in practices so far this year, and can look forward to a successful season in league play. So don't miss either of these two big openers.

The Juniors have a new coach this season, but Tom Thompson is by no means new to the league. Last year he coached for SGWU. His juniors appear to be fine prospects and are so well balanced that Thompson plans to substitute freely and get good mileage out of the whole team.

When the Redmen lock horns with their opponents this evening, a new City Intercollegiate Basketball League season will have started. Under the tutelage of Coach Ron Sharpe, the boys can look for an eventful and probably successful year, while the leadership of Jack Walker on the floor should no doubt aid the team immensely in their quest for a second straight championship.

Along with Walker come, only two returnees from last year's club, in the persons of Ian Monteith and Earland Pepper. Other members of a virtually new team are Steve Chandler, a first-year Med student from U.C.L.A., whose rebounding and general play-making ability should prove very valuable to the team, while Sy Luterman will give the squad added height and rebounding strength. Another desirable addition to the club is Marty Wright, whose basketball experience should prove to be an asset. Marty, who played with the Yvan Coutu Huskies last year, knows just about all the tricks of the game, and his presence on the squad should be an important factor in the success of the club.

Moreover, there are three boys with the Redmen who played last year with the Junior Varsity under Neil MacGregor. These three, Jim Berwick, Dan Fleming, and Bob Mingie, will give the club added depth, while giving the boys experience for coming seasons. Rounding out the squad is Bruce Wilkie, who is returning this year after a two-year layoff, having played previously for the Intermediate club.

In summation, it looks as though another exciting year is in store for Redmen fans, who can see their representatives in action for the first time tonight at 8 pm in the Currie Gym against the Loyola Warriors.
